4.2 What cookies are

Cookies are small text files placed on a device by a website. Similar technologies may include pixels, local storage, software development kits and server-side identifiers. They may remember settings, support security, measure traffic or help us understand how the website is used.

4.3 Categories

Strictly necessary technologies support core functions such as security, session management, load balancing, authentication, consent recording and fraud prevention. They generally cannot be disabled through the site's consent tool where the site cannot operate safely without them.

Preference technologies remember choices such as language, region or display settings.

Analytics technologies help measure traffic, pages, interactions, errors and performance. They should be activated only in accordance with applicable consent requirements.

Marketing or advertising technologies may track activity across services for advertising or audience measurement. GCB Fintech should not activate these technologies unless they are specifically required, documented and lawfully consented to.

4.4 Consent and controls

Where required by applicable law, non-essential cookies are activated only after consent. Users may change or withdraw consent through the platform Cookie Settings Panel. Blocking necessary technologies may affect security, login or platform functionality.

4.5 Third parties

The platform may use hosting, security, analytics, identity-verification, payment, communications or customer-support providers. Each provider and cookie should be listed in the live cookie register with its purpose, provider, duration, category, legal basis and any international-transfer information.
